[From the Rallway World.] Gold and Silver.

There is a positive dearth of fipancial frems for a weekly budget. The new phase of the Wall-Street stock market has been fully ex plained, and the currency question has ettled down to the stale condition of an often repeated story. Neither in Congress nor in the Treasury Department is there any move ment designed to facilitate the operation of the practicable law now in force, nor to substitute any other measure calculated to Secretary Bristow seems to be waiting for for an opportunity to destroy that which it it has already created. People are sick and Mean time the depreciation in silver is exciting attention, and various speculations are given to the public in regard to its effects upon the trade currents of the world. The English papers already anticipate diminished exports of merchandise to India, and an increased import of the products of that country, and in San Francisco the silver accumulation causes no little anxiety. This trouble will in due time regulate itself, we imagine, with the general revival in trade. The demonetization of silver in Germany, and the immense product of our bonanza mines, have combined to cause a glut in the article. coming, as they have, at a time when trade has stagnated throughout the civilized world, while one of the very causes of the extraordinary silver supply-viz., the change of standard in Germany-has contributed to make a more active demand for gold. It is not clear, however, that the depreciation in the one of these precious metals, measured by the gold standard, is to be trusted as a permanent condition. The absorbing capacity of the East for silver is almost incredible, and when a more active business calls for an increased import of eastern products it is not improbable that the glut will be less apparent. If England gets low prices for its exforts, it will, in the same coin, pay a lower price for its imports, and this will settle a question which seems to be scarcely worthy of an economical essay. We hold it to be susceptible of proof that since the discoveries of gold in California and Australia there has been, in fact, a greater depreciation in gold than in silver-the only difference being that in comparing silver with gold we have an easy standard of measure, while the depreciation in gold is only to be traced in the higher scale of prices for nearly everything which gold will buy. This question presents one aspect, however, which illustrates the utter absurdity of the proposition which some of our modern economists are fond of stating-viz., that the value of gold is determined by the cost of its production. This assertion has been made repeatedly, and with profound gravity, as if its adoption as the standard of value by the majority of entightened nations had no influence of importance upon it. Suppose now that Germany, France, England, and the United S ates should resolve to demonetize gold and adopt the silver standard, what would be the effect? It would not be long, we presume, before it would be discovered that gold had largely depreciated in value, while silver had corre-pondingly increased. The fact that gold and silver are used as money by the entire world gives to these metals a large portion of their value. Just at this time silver is thrown out of one of its markets, and its product has largely increased; hence a temporary excess, which will gradually work off to those countries gradually work off to those countries where white metal is preferred to yellow as large portion of their value. Just at this the representative of money. Gold is much the most convenient for use in the settlement of balances; hence it is preferred by nations of advanced intelligence, but there is no absolute certainty that it will forever be preferred to silver. Much will depend upon future developments in gold mining, although the question may not arise for many centuries. The fact that since 1848 several of the richest nations in the world have abandoned silver as a standard, and adopted gold in its place, will account for the depreciation in silver and the comparatively sustained price of gold as to relative value better than more complicated and ingenious theories which are constantly propounded. The increased product of silver has neither been so large, nor has it continued so long during the last half century as that of gold, and but for the demonetization of silver gold would of the richest nations in the world have the last balf century as that of gold, and out for the demonetization of silver gold would probably have depreciated in its value as probably have depreciated in its value as probably bave depreciated in its value as G. W. THOMAS.

Commissioners. produced by the gold mines of California and Australia since the discovery in 1848 has been required for use as money in place of the silver which it has supplanted, and under such conditions it should be a matter of surprise that silver has been so well maintained in comparative value. This could not have been possible except for the insatiate trade-appetite of the East, which has absorbed it almost as fast as European nations have given up ins use, except for change. Our California and Nevada friends need not feel particularly anxious on the surject as it presents itself to our minds. When trade revives, and when the German supply has been absorbed, John Chinaman will take all that the famous bonanzo can turn out,

How a Man was Charged with Passing a Counterfeit Ten-Dollar Bill which Tarned Out to be Genuine.

[From the Chicago Journal.] A man by the name of Andrew Whitty was before Commissioner Hoyne this morning charged with passing counterfeit money. In cases of this kind it is often very difficult to prove the defendant's knowledge than the bill or bills were counterfeit, and failing to do that the case fails through. In this case the Government had the "dead wood" on Whitty from the start. The facts they were all ready to prove were these: Whitty got somewhere a very greasy looking ten-dollar bill on the First National Bank of Buffilo. He went to one Henry Meyer, told Meyer be had a counterfeit ten, and the two put their heads together to see where they could put it. At last Meyer paid Whitty a certain amount on the bill. Then they got two other men, named Henry Powdermaker and Charles Getz, and the four entered into a conspiracy to pass off the bill and share the proceeds. Finally the gang had a falling out in regard to the distribution of the profits, and Meyer "squealed" on Whitty and had him arrested. The three-Meyer, Powdermaker, and Getz-were all present in court this morning to swear against White, and the case, on the whole, looked fizek for him. The Covernment counsel was in an eestasy of delight, for there was no trouble in proving a guilty knowledge in this case. Assistant District Attorney Oleson represented the Government, and Captain Miller, of the West Side, the defence. Henry Meyer was first sworn. The bill was produced. The witness was about to sell the story, when the Court suggested that it might be as well first to prove the bad character of the money. Wh, yes, of course; that was a matter of mene formal proof. Perhaps Capain Miller would admit the badness of the bill. It would save time. Cuptain Miller knew, as well as every one else who saw the till, that it was one of the worst counterfeits ever made. But he agu Captain me her was as intice surprised as Commissioner forgot his dignity and smiled audibly, and everybody else in the courtroom followed suit. Sure enough the bill was good. The four confederates had got up a conspiracy to defraud somebody by passing a genuine ten-dollar bill. It was a funny case. Of course Whitty was dis-
